

PROCEDURES FOR IDENTIFYING HIGH-POTENTIAL
EXECUTIVE AND MANAGEMENT CANDIDATES

1. Identification of Requirements. Activities will inventory their current executive and manager population for turnover and retirement potential every 2 years or more often if they deem necessary. This information is the gross requirement for new executives and managers. Long-range objectives, goals, priorities of higher level command, projected ceiling targets, average grade goals, and organizational realignments will be quantified to obtain any adjustment factor to the gross requirements for new executives and managers. These projected requirements should cover a period of 5 years. The net requirement should indicate the number, grade, and occupational area.
2. Command and Department-wide Requirements. Activities will inform their major claimant of forecasted executive and manager requirements by 4 August 1975. Forecasts will depict the requirements by number, grade, and occupational area and will show the number of GS-13-15s (or equivalent) currently identified as potential executives or managers within each occupational area. Major claimants will review the activity manpower forecasts every 2 years or more often if they deem necessary and make command projections based on the activity forecasts. Command projections should include long-range objectives, goals, priorities and provide for higher level manpower reviews. Major claimants will inform Department of the Navy Civilian Executive Management Board (CEMB) of their forecasted executive requirements every 2 years. Initial executive forecasts should be forwarded to the CEMB via OCMM Code 232 by 5 September 1975. Forecasted executive requirements to the CEMB should be portrayed according to number, grade, and occupational area and the number of GS-15s (or equivalent) currently identified as potential executives within each occupational area.
3. Announcing Executive and Management Development Opportunities. The CEMB will examine the executive manpower forecasts in light of law limitations, ever-changing operational requirements and priorities, and the number of currently identified high-potential GS-15s. Department-wide executive requirements will be based on these conditions and adjustments, if necessary, will be made to command executive forecasts. The CEMB will inform the command headquarters by 3 October 1975 of projected Department-wide executive manpower requirements that the system can support. The command headquarters will use these adjusted executive manpower requirements as part of their aggregated managerial manpower requirements. Commands will then direct their activities to announce to all GS-13-15s (or equivalent) the projected executive and managerial development opportunities by 31 October 1975. Commands and activities that review their executive and manager manpower requirements at periodic intervals within the 2 year time frame are to announce the executive and management development opportunities as they arise. Announcements should identify the number, grade, and occupational area of their career developmental opportunities; specify nomination procedures and criteria for evaluation; and emphasize that selection as a high-potential candidate for the program does not represent a guarantee for promotion. Enclosure (2) is an example of such an announcement.

Enclosure (1)

4. Self-Nomination. Employees (GS-13-15 or equivalent) who wish to compete for selection to the Executive and Management Development Program may nominate themselves. Additionally, activity management is charged with encouraging those employees it believes to possess executive or managerial potential to self-nominate. Enclosure (3) is a self-nomination form which employees must complete and submit along with a completed Standard Form 171 directly to the activity civilian personnel office (CPO).

5. Supervisory Appraisal. The CPO will have the first and second level supervisors of the self-nominated candidate complete an Executive and managerial Potential Appraisal Form (Enclosure (4)) on the applicant. Additional appraisals should be obtained from former supervisors if the former supervisor is considered to have been in a position to observe the specific behaviors being evaluated.

6. Panel Interview. It is suggested that the head of each activity establish a panel (or panels) of top management to review the nomination and appraisal forms of all applicants. The panel(s) may review the nominations and appraisals as an initial screening of the applicants, but should conduct personal interviews in making their final selection. The personal interview is an essential ingredient in the selection process and should be used by the panel to explore the personal and professional background of each applicant. Questions should be developed prior to the interview. They should be phrased in such a manner as to elicit responses displaying possession of essential job characteristics common to executive or manager positions and to indicate the motivation, work standards, initiative, interest in self-development, goal orientation and planning of the applicant. Where top managers are themselves candidates for the program, regional or national panels may be considered. If regional panels are used, consultation with the appropriate regional office of Civilian Manpower Management (ROCM) should be held for coordination. The panel(s) should consider all materials and submit their recommendations of high-potential candidates for development to the head of the activity.

7. Activity Selection and Endorsement. The head of the activity, using panel recommendations if made, will select those GS-13 and 14s he considers to possess managerial potential and will endorse to the headquarters command those GS-15s he feels possess executive potential. An endorsement letter should be submitted by 5 December 1975 to the command headquarters along with all supporting material for each GS-15 applicant. Executive inventory records for GS-15s should be included in the supporting material whenever possible. The number of applicants selected or endorsed should be relative to the number of activity, command, and Department-wide executive and managerial developmental opportunities announced. Guidance on the number of applicants selected is provided in reference (b).

Enclosure (1)

8. Command Review and Selection. It is suggested that command headquarters establish a panel of high-level personnel to review the GS-15 nominations and make recommendations for selection as a high-potential executive candidate to the commander of the headquarters command. Whenever possible, field activities should be represented on the selection panels. Panels may conduct personal interviews with prospective candidates. Headquarters commanders will make the final determination by 16 January 1976 of high-potential GS-15s. The number of candidates selected for executive development should be relative to the number of command and Department-wide executive development opportunities announced. Reference (b) provides guidance on the number of candidates to be selected.

9. Notification. All applicants to the Executive and Management Development Program are to be notified of their status via their chain of command. Non-selection for the program does not carry the implication of a lack of high-potential. Most likely, non-selection would occur as a result of a limited number of executive and managerial development opportunities available thereby restricting the number of candidates selected. Activities should make certain that those candidates not selected or those employees who did not apply for the program continue to be developed based not only on activity or command objectives, but on the employees' career objectives as well.

10. Guidance and Individual Development Plan (IDP) Control. Supervisors of high-potential executive and managerial candidates, with support from their civilian personnel office are responsible for identifying general and individual developmental needs, counseling candidates on executive and managerial opportunities and qualifications requirements thereof, and for translating these general requirements and opportunities into recommended individual developmental plans for successful candidates. By 20 February 1976, or within 30 days of selection as a high-potential executive or manager, successful candidates, in consultation with their supervisors, will have developed an IDP covering a 24 month period. Guidance in developing IDPs is provided in reference (c). By 12 March 1976, a copy of all high-potential executive and manager candidates' IDPs will be forwarded to command headquarters. Command headquarters will review the IDPs of all high-potential candidates. By 26 March 1976, they will forward the IDPs of high-potential GS-15 executive candidates to the CEMB for review. Command headquarters and the CEMB will review the IDPs to determine that developmental objectives are relevant and that an appropriate level of effort is being expended on executive and management development.

11. Resources and Assignments. Heads of commands and activities are to ensure that the resources necessary to support executive and managerial development effort in the field and headquarters are obtained and to establish plans and procedures deemed necessary to implement and monitor the executive and management development program within their organizations. Developmental assignments between headquarters commands, between field activities, and between headquarters commands and field activities should be supported and facilitated by all organizations.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE EXECUTIVE AND MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

MEMORANDUM

From: Commanding Officer
To: All GS-13-15 employees

Subj: Executive and Management Development Program

Ref: (a) OCMMINST 12412.2 of

Encl: (1) NAVSO Form 12412/4(12-74) Self-nomination

1. In accordance with reference (a), _____ is informing all employees, GS-13-15 (or equivalent), of the Department of the Navy Executive and Management Development Program. All employees GS-13-15 who wish to be considered for a 24-month development program toward one of the objectives listed below may nominate themselves by completing enclosure (1) and submitting it along with a completed Standard Form 171, to the civilian personnel office by _____.

2. This information will be used, along with two supervisory appraisals and a panel interview, to assess your executive or managerial potential. The panel will make its recommendations known to the commanding officer. Final determination of high-potential manager candidates (GS-13/14) will be made by the commanding officer, based on the panel's recommendations and his own knowledge of the candidates. High-potential executive candidates (GS-15) will be endorsed to command headquarters, where the headquarters commander will make the final determination.

3. Each candidate's potential will be evaluated on leadership and management abilities as well as special qualifications pertinent to the specific career objective toward which the development will be directed.

4. Selection as a high-potential candidate for one of the career objectives listed does not represent a guarantee of promotion or selection. Non-selection for the program does not carry the implication of a lack of high potential. Most likely, non-selection would occur as a result of a limited number of executive or managerial development opportunities available.
